The psycho-social support project for the victims of the last war on Gaza strip is a charitable non-profit-making project that seeks to help Palestinian families who were damaged during the last war on Gaza strip in 2014. The project's goal is to rehabilitate the Palestinian families, to help them overcome the psychological difficulties that they have been through, and to teach them how to cope with these challenges. This is maintained by providing relief items such as (food parcels and gifts for children), Psychosocial support activities for the whole family members in order to help them gain essential coping skills and to reinforce their familial relations, psycho-educational support meetings for parents and school teachers, and entertainment activities for the children.

Targeted group: The families, children and some school teachers who were traumatized by being exposed to horrifying situations during the last war on Gaza strip. The work will be conducted in the middle region, Gaza governorate, and the Northern region of Gaza strip. The team will coordinate with the families for field and home visits. The total number of beneficiaries is 4000 persons, in which; 150-250 traumatized families from the last war of 2014 on the Gaza strip with an average of 1500 persons, 200 school teachers and 300 parents benefited from psych-educational sessions, and 2000 children benefited from group activities that were conducted in the local community.
